

Two Master Bedrooms

Why is this a trend, and where can you find a these kinds of homes?

Why would anyone want two master bedrooms? And if dual sleeping arrangements works best, where in the world do you find a home with two master bedrooms? Here's a few of the reasons a home with two master suites is becoming more common:

- Elderly parents are visiting or moving in with their middle aged children.

I remember my parents giving up their bedroom when my grandparents came to visit, so that they could have the more comfortable place to stay. Homebuyers looking for two master bedrooms want to give their guests as much comfort and luxury as possible - without giving up their own space. And when elderly parents move in, both couples have their own private place to retreat to.

- Couples find that time alone creates better time together.

Many couples that are requesting homes with two master suites cite sleeping problems or differing schedules. "My wife's a very light sleeper," said one. "I like to stay up late reading or watching tv in bed. This way, we both get the sleep we need."

- Snoring or medical conditions might mean that two master bedrooms are better than one.

Snoring is probably the most common reason noted by couples for requesting two master bedrooms - connected by a common hallway and luxurious bathroom. But other situations can be heartwrenching. If a spouse needs special medical care or a type of bed that can't be shared, two master bedrooms allow both spouses to have a peaceful place to sleep - while still close to each other.

Are you searching for a home with two master bedrooms? They can be tough to find.

If the second master suite will be for guests or live-in relatives, you may want to search for a home with an in-law suite. These homes usually have a traditional master suite, but then include another bedroom with a full attached bath and a large closet. In many cases, in-law suites can make a terrific space for short or long term guests. Click here for some good places to look for an in-law suite floor plan.

Another option is working with a custom builder to convert a traditional home plan into a home with two master bedrooms.

Here's a section of a home typical to the style custom builders in the Raleigh/Triangle area would offer in the $300-400K or higher price point.

We can redesign this floor plan just slightly, and give the new homeowner the two master bedrooms they're looking for.

The living room would be walled off, and would become the second master bedroom. We would work with the homebuyer to determine exactly how much closet space they are looking for, and how it should be distributed.

Both bedrooms would then share the central master bath.

In our case, a change like this could be accomplished with very little additional cost.

And it's not hard to convert other home plans into a design that could be considered a "two master bedroom" home.

This design is called the Bostwick (copyright Frank Betz) and is one of the new homes we offer in our "Library of Favorites".

The downstairs study or bedroom 4 is already well planned as a guest suite.

If the homebuyer is looking to use this fairly permanently as a guest suite, we might suggest removing the exterior doorway to the bath, and adding a half bath elsewhere on the first floor for regular use.

There are just a few online home plan guides that offer homes with "two master bedrooms". Here are links to several designs and architects:

Two Master Bedrooms - Shared Bath (by Architectural Designs)

Two Master Bedrooms - One Large, One Smaller (by Studer Designs)

Two Master Bedrooms - In Law Suite (by Architectural Designs)

Two Master Bedrooms - Selection of Luxury Plans (Online Home Plans)

Or bring us any plans that you're considering, and we'll be happy to recommend what would work best and what changes might be required.

A two master bedroom home may not be easy to find, but it's certainly a possibility!

Stanton Homes - Building Exceptional Living Experiences

Stanton Homes offers "Meet the Builder" events, where any potential homebuyer can bring floor plans and ask an experienced, knowledgeable general contractor a variety of questions.

This question regarding incorporating more than one master bedroom was brought up at a recent Raleigh new homes event. Feel free to attend our next "Meet the Builder" event, or we can meet with you on an individual basis to discuss your home building project.

And if you're a veteran, active duty, or retired military, ask about "Stanton Homes for Heroes" - Military Discounts on New Homes.

Copyright 2008 by Stanton Homes. Each situation and home plan is different. Please consult us for information specific to your needs!